

Inglês

<https://www.tecconcursos.com.br/s/Q74mRn>

Ordenação: Por Matéria e Assunto • Questões Seleccionadas Aleatoriamente

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857083

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026
Raciocínio Lógico - Equivalências Lógicas (Inclui Negação de Proposições Compostas)

90) P: "Maria pagou e não assistiu."

Q: "João assistiu sem pagar."

No que concerne às proposições P e Q apresentadas anteriormente, julgue o item seguinte.

A proposição Q é a negação de "Se João assistiu, então ele pagou."

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251702

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

23) As far back as 4000 B.C., historians believe, formal record-keeping systems were first instituted by organized businesses and governments in the Near East to allay their concerns about correctly accounting for receipts and disbursements and collecting taxes. Similar developments occurred with respect to the Zhao dynasty in China (1122-256 B.C.). The need for and indications of audits can be traced back to public finance systems in Babylonia, Greece, the Roman Empire, the City States of Italy, etc., all of which developed a detailed system of checks and counterchecks. Specifically, these governments were worried about incompetent officials prone to making bookkeeping errors and inaccuracies as well as corrupt officials who were motivated to perpetrate fraud whenever the opportunity arose. Even the Bible (referring to the period between 1800 B.C. and A.D. 95) explains the basic rationale for instituting controls rather straightforwardly: "...if employees have an opportunity to steal they may take advantage of it." The Bible also contains examples of good internal control practices, such as dual custody of assets, restriction of access to assets, and segregation of duties, as well as examples of the need for competent and honest employees. Historically then, the emergence of double-entry bookkeeping in circa 1494 A.D. can be directly traced to the critical need for exercising stewardship and control. Throughout European history, for instance, fraud cases — such as the South Sea bubble of the 18th century, and the tulip scandal — provided the justification for exercising more control over managers.

S. Ramamoorti. Internal auditing: history, evolution, and prospects. p. 3. Internet: <<https://na.theiia.org>> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

People have inherited from the Bible the notion that auditing is necessary because of the inherently dishonest nature of human beings.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764326

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

48) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Some lawyers have considered the possibility of sending parents to prison if they missed meetings with teachers.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251704

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

18) As far back as 4000 B.C., historians believe, formal record-keeping systems were first instituted by organized businesses and governments in the Near East to allay their concerns about correctly accounting for receipts and disbursements and collecting taxes. Similar developments occurred with respect to the Zhao dynasty in China

(1122-256 B.C.). The need for and indications of audits can be traced back to public finance systems in Babylonia, Greece, the Roman Empire, the City States of Italy, etc., all of which developed a detailed system of checks and counterchecks. Specifically, these governments were worried about incompetent officials prone to making bookkeeping errors and inaccuracies as well as corrupt officials who were motivated to perpetrate fraud whenever the opportunity arose. Even the Bible (referring to the period between 1800 B.C. and A.D. 95) explains the basic rationale for instituting controls rather straightforwardly: "...if employees have an opportunity to steal they may take advantage of it." The Bible also contains examples of good internal control practices, such as dual custody of assets, restriction of access to assets, and segregation of duties, as well as examples of the need for competent and honest employees. Historically then, the emergence of double-entry bookkeeping in circa 1494 A.D. can be directly traced to the critical need for exercising stewardship and control. Throughout European history, for instance, fraud cases — such as the South Sea bubble of the 18th century, and the tulip scandal — provided the justification for exercising more control over managers.

S. Ramamoorti. Internal auditing: history, evolution, and prospects. p. 3. Internet: <<https://na.theiia.org>> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

Without changing the meaning of the text, the fragment "explains the basic rationale for instituting controls rather straightforwardly" could be correctly replaced with explains a common-sense approach to retain control instead of simply handing it over.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764324

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

47) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

There are schools which award students iPads if they never miss a day during a school year.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74908

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Significado de Palavras e Expressões (Sinônimos, Antônimos, Parônimos, Denotação, Conotação, etc.)

75) Privacy groups and lawmakers are calling for a new and broader investigation into Google and its privacy practices after the U.S. Federal Communications Commission (FCC) announced that it found no evidence that the company broke eavesdropping laws.

Late last week, the FCC reported that there was no legal precedent to find fault with Google collecting unprotected home Wi-Fi data, such as personal email, passwords and search histories, with its roaming Street View cars between 2007 and 2010. However, the FCC did fine Google $ 25,000 for obstructing its investigation.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), a national privacy watchdog, disagreed with the FCC findings. In a letter sent to U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder today, EPIC asked that the Department of Justice investigate Google's surreptitious collecting of Wi-Fi data from residential networks. U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, a senior member of the U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee, has also stepped into the fray.

"The circumstances surrounding Google's siphoning of personal information leave many unanswered questions," Markey said today in an email to Computerworld. "I believe Congress should immediately hold a hearing to get to the bottom of this serious situation."

Internet: <www.computerworld.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above it can be said that

"surreptitious" is synonymous with concealed.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251715

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

26) Shining a light on the auditors

Every financial meltdown prompts a hunt for scapegoats. In the wake of the most recent one, calls to reform accounting have grown particularly loud, and action is on the way. In the coming months both America and the European Union are expected to introduce new rules aimed at enhancing auditors' independence. But for all the heated debate over the changes, any improvement is likely to be modest.

America's bean-counters were effectively self-regulating until 2002. That year, following a wave of accounting scandals, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley act to reform corporate governance. It limited the consulting work firms could do for their audit clients and set up a new regulator, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. At a meeting on December 4th it outlined three policies it expects to implement by the end of 2014.

One aims to make audit reports more useful by requiring a section highlighting "critical audit matters" — the high-stakes judgment calls that keep accountants up at night, such as how the business being audited has valued its intangible assets. Another would cut the share of an audit that accounting firms can outsource without disclosure from 20% to 5%. Such information is valuable in emerging markets, where local accountants vary widely in quality. The most controversial reform would identify by name the lead partner responsible for each audit.

Although identifying partners does not increase their legal liability, it does put their reputation on the line. This seems to make accountants more cautious.

The Economist, December 7th 2013, p. 68 (adapted).

Judge the item below, based on the text above.

One of the premises of the text is that every time there is a sudden economic crisis, we tend to quickly try to find a culprit.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/251728

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Substituição de Palavras e Reescrita de Frases (Inglês)

79) A compelling case can be made for mandatory audit rotation that auditors who keep the same client for too long get excessively cosy with its management. As somebody has put it, "When the same incumbent firm has been in place for 100 years, to me that's not an audit, that's a joint venture."

Most academic studies have either found no link between the length of a relationship and its quality, or determined that longer tenures yield better results, because the accountants have time to master the intricacies of clients' businesses. Obliging companies to solicit bids at regular intervals, as Britain does, has shaken up the business: HSBC said in August that it will drop KPMG in favour of PwC; on December 2nd Unilever announced that it is making the opposite switch. Indeed, the big accounting firms argue that forced rotation would reduce competition by preventing the incumbent from bidding.

Proponents counter that the accounting giants, and academics whose research is often financed by them, have good reason to resist change. Among the reform's strongest supporters are smaller firms that hope to break the Big Four's stranglehold.

Yet even the most vocal advocates of mandatory rotation concede that it is no magic bullet. Auditors have a conflict of interest at the heart of their business — they are paid by the companies they are supposed to assess objectively. Unless that changes, there will be no substitute for investors doing their own due diligence.

Idem (adapted).

Judge the following item, according to the text above.

The expression "magic bullet" could be correctly replaced by cure-all, wonder drug or perfect solution, without any change in its meaning.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857063

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

2) Leia o texto abaixo.

Little attention has been devoted to legislation's point of origin — the legislative drafting process. Such commentary as has been offered is essentially technical in nature. However, the relationship between drafter and text is the furthest thing from a technical, value-neutral enterprise.

For example: a question confronted by every drafter and one with obvious ethical and political implications is, "How much is to be left to the drafter's discretion?" Obviously, the drafter who less frequently inquires about the client's desires will have greater latitude to exercise discretion and accordingly can play more of an "advocacy" role in shaping the legislation, a situation which can lead to his or her sidestepping the duty of abiding by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation.

But this is not to paint too malevolent a portrait of legislative drafting personnel. They are not a fifth column of subversives who pursue personal advocacy objectives in everything that they do. Indeed, many may even be unaware of their power. They are, though, continually called upon to exercise personal judgment in the performance of their duties. Such judgments are frequently policy judgments, and drafting decisions are often influenced consciously or subconsciously by the advocacy agenda of the individual drafter. The legislative drafter plays a more active role in the process than is generally accorded to the stereotypical scribe, laboring in nameless and faceless obscurity to produce a bill draft.

David Marcello. The Ethics and Politics of Legislative Drafting.
In: Tulane Law Review, vol. 70, p. 2437, 1996 (adapted).

About the preceding text, judge the following item.

It is correct to conclude from the first paragraph of the text that its author believes that not much has been explored about the true nature of legislative drafters' work, which is not merely technical and impartial.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/74911

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Arquiteto/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Significado de Palavras e Expressões (Sinônimos, Antônimos, Parônimos, Denotação, Conotação, etc.)

77) Privacy groups and lawmakers are calling for a new and broader investigation into Google and its privacy practices after the U.S. Federal Communications Commission (FCC) announced that it found no evidence that the company broke eavesdropping laws.

Late last week, the FCC reported that there was no legal precedent to find fault with Google collecting unprotected home Wi-Fi data, such as personal email, passwords and search histories, with its roaming Street View cars between 2007 and 2010. However, the FCC did fine Google $ 25,000 for obstructing its investigation.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), a national privacy watchdog, disagreed with the FCC findings. In a letter sent to U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder today, EPIC asked that the Department of Justice investigate Google's surreptitious collecting of Wi-Fi data from residential networks. U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, a senior member of the U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee, has also stepped into the fray.

"The circumstances surrounding Google's siphoning of personal information leave many unanswered questions," Markey said today in an email to Computerworld. "I believe Congress should immediately hold a hearing to get to the bottom of this serious situation."

Internet: <www.computerworld.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above it can be said that

"fray" is synonymous with fighting.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764632

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

54) Prostate-Cancer Screening

To screen or not to screen? When it comes to cancer, doctors say early detection is the best defense. But the picture is a little fuzzier when it comes to prostate cancer, which in many cases progresses slowly and may not require aggressive treatment. In March, a 10-year National Cancer Institute study involving more than 76,000 men seemed to make the case for watchful waiting. About half of the study volunteers were randomly assigned to the screening group, getting either a manual exam or a prostate-specific antigen test each year; the latter test measures blood levels of a protein associated with prostate cancer. The other study participants received no screening guidance and were left to decide on their own whether they would get a yearly test. At the seven-year mark, 50 men had died from prostate cancer in the screening group, and 44 had died in the usual-care group. In other words, screening and early detection did not lower the death rate from prostate cancer.

Based on this and other studies, the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force said there was insufficient evidence to assess the balance of benefits and harms of prostate-cancer screening in men younger than age 75. The task force recommended against prostate-cancer screening in men 75 and older.

Internet: <www.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The antigen test some of the participants had checks the blood levels of a cancer-associated protein.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74909

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

68) Privacy groups and lawmakers are calling for a new and broader investigation into Google and its privacy practices after the U.S. Federal Communications Commission (FCC) announced that it found no evidence that the company broke eavesdropping laws.

Late last week, the FCC reported that there was no legal precedent to find fault with Google collecting unprotected home Wi-Fi data, such as personal email, passwords and search histories, with its roaming Street View cars between 2007 and 2010. However, the FCC did fine Google $ 25,000 for obstructing its investigation.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), a national privacy watchdog, disagreed with the FCC findings. In a letter sent to U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder today, EPIC asked that the Department of Justice investigate Google's surreptitious collecting of Wi-Fi data from residential networks. U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, a senior member of the U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee, has also stepped into the fray.

"The circumstances surrounding Google's siphoning of personal information leave many unanswered questions," Markey said today in an email to Computerworld. "I believe Congress should immediately hold a hearing to get to the bottom of this serious situation."

Internet: <www.computerworld.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above it can be said that calls for a federal investigation came after the Federal Communications Commission found that Google did not break the law as it collected personal data on Wi-Fi networks.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960600

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

6) The role of the police in a healthy democracy is radically different from their role in authoritarian societies. In autocratic regimes, the police serve mainly to protect not the people, but the regime. The police are therefore typically politicized, with appointments being part of the patronage system that rewards regime loyalists. Police officers spend a great deal of time spying on the populace to unmask political opposition; crime against citizens is less of a concern. Abuse and corruption are usually rife, because police are not held accountable for their actions. Rather, political leaders tolerate abuses by the police in return for police loyalty to the regime.

By contrast, in democratic societies the primary mission of the police is to protect citizens against crime and disorder, including illegal or corrupt behavior by officials. In democracies, police have carefully circumscribed roles that require close and positive relations with ordinary citizens. The use of arms and pursuit of criminals are rare and take up only a tiny fraction of police time. Instead, police officers spend the vast bulk of their time building relationships with the community through patrols, community-enhancing activities, and listening to citizens. The goal of democratic policing is to build a web of relationships between the community and the police that helps to control crime by making police aware of the persons and activities in the communities that they are assigned to protect and by inclining citizens to trust and cooperate with police. This also achieves the primary goal of making citizens feel secure in their daily activities, thereby fostering a climate that encourages increased legitimate business activity, investment, and planning for the future.

Michael D. Wiatrowski and Jack A. Goldstone. The ballot and the badge: democratic policing. In: Journal of Democracy, Volume 21, Number 2. Internet: <muse.jhu.edu> (adapted).

Concerning the previous text, judge the following item.

The authors oppose two different roles of the police, each one related to a specific way political power can be exercised in a society.

Certo
Errado

www.teccursos.com.br/questoes/3960608

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Conjunções e Conectivos (Conjunctions e Linking Words)

69) The role of the police in a healthy democracy is radically different from their role in authoritarian societies. In autocratic regimes, the police serve mainly to protect not the people, but the regime. The police are therefore typically politicized, with appointments being part of the patronage system that rewards regime loyalists. Police officers spend a great deal of time spying on the populace to unmask political opposition; crime against citizens is less of a concern. Abuse and corruption are usually rife, because police are not held accountable for their actions. Rather, political leaders tolerate abuses by the police in return for police loyalty to the regime.

By contrast, in democratic societies the primary mission of the police is to protect citizens against crime and disorder, including illegal or corrupt behavior by officials. In democracies, police have carefully circumscribed roles that require close and positive relations with ordinary citizens. The use of arms and pursuit of criminals are rare and take up only a tiny fraction of police time. Instead, police officers spend the vast bulk of their time building relationships with the community through patrols, community-enhancing activities, and listening to citizens. The goal of democratic policing is to build a web of relationships between the community and the police that helps to control crime by making police aware of the persons and activities in the communities that they are assigned to protect and by inclining citizens to trust and cooperate with police. This also achieves the primary goal of making citizens feel secure in their daily activities, thereby fostering a climate that encourages increased legitimate business activity, investment, and planning for the future.

Michael D. Wiatrowski and Jack A. Goldstone. The ballot and the badge: democratic policing. In: Journal of Democracy, Volume 21, Number 2. Internet: <muse.jhu.edu> (adapted).

Concerning the previous text, judge the following item.

The words "Rather" and "Instead" could be used interchangeably in the text without this making it incoherent.

Certo
Errado

www.teccursos.com.br/questoes/3960620

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

9) The security risks faced by Parliaments, legislatures, elected representatives, and the officials who support them, differ greatly according to their evolving national and local circumstances, among other things. For some, the biggest security risks may stem from disruptive protesters and cyber criminals, but terrorism may pose the most concerning risks for others. In fact, threat actors differ enormously in their intentions and capabilities, which also change over time.

Given that risk is a product of threat, vulnerability, and impact, it follows that ultimately there are only three ways to reduce security risk — namely, by reducing the threat, reducing the vulnerability, or reducing the impact (or some combination thereof). Reducing the threat element of security risk is difficult, especially in the case of determined and capable threat actors. Responsibility for reducing threats tends to lie mainly with national law enforcement, security, and intelligence agencies. That said, parliaments and other organisations can contribute to threat reduction through deterrence — in other words, by influencing the intentions of threat actors. Carefully crafted security-minded communications can convey a discouraging message to potential attackers, to the effect that they should expect to confront professional security measures and face a substantial risk of being caught. For instance, a parliamentary website might advertise that visitors will undergo 'airport-style screening', without explaining precisely what that entails. The public should be reassured by such message, whereas some threat actors might be deterred.

Paul Martin. Parliamentary security: an introductory guide. Internet: <www.cpaq.org> (adapted).

Considering the preceding text, judge the following item.

Based on the text, it is correct to conclude that the possibility of threat reduction being successful varies according to the level of determination and to the ability of those posing threats.

Certo
Errado

www.teccursos.com.br/questoes/251712

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

24) Shining a light on the auditors

Every financial meltdown prompts a hunt for scapegoats. In the wake of the most recent one, calls to reform accounting have grown particularly loud, and action is on the way. In the coming months both America and the European Union are expected to introduce new rules aimed at enhancing auditors' independence. But for all the heated debate over the changes, any improvement is likely to be modest.

America's bean-counters were effectively self-regulating until 2002. That year, following a wave of accounting scandals, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley act to reform corporate governance. It limited the consulting work firms could do for their audit clients and set up a new regulator, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. At a meeting on December 4th it outlined three policies it expects to implement by the end of 2014.

One aims to make audit reports more useful by requiring a section highlighting "critical audit matters" — the high-stakes judgment calls that keep accountants up at night, such as how the business being audited has valued its intangible assets. Another would cut the share of an audit that accounting firms can outsource without disclosure from 20% to 5%. Such information is valuable in emerging markets, where local accountants vary widely in quality. The most controversial reform would identify by name the lead partner responsible for each audit.

Although identifying partners does not increase their legal liability, it does put their reputation on the line. This seems to make accountants more cautious.

The Economist, December 7th 2013, p. 68 (adapted).

Judge the item below, based on the text above.

Assessing the criteria businesses apply to set a price to their intangible assets is the kind of job that makes auditors highly anxious.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026
Raciocínio Lógico - Equivalências Lógicas (Inclui Negação de Proposições Compostas)

89) P: “Maria pagou e não assistiu.”

Q: “João assistiu sem pagar.”

No que concerne às proposições P e Q apresentadas anteriormente, julgue o item seguinte.

A negação da proposição Q pode ser expressa por “João não assistiu sem pagar.”.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026
Raciocínio Lógico - Equivalências Lógicas (Inclui Negação de Proposições Compostas)

92) R: “Se o deputado não é favorável à matéria, então a votação do deputado é favorável se, e somente se, a legenda recomendar o voto favorável.”

Julgue o item seguinte, acerca da proposição R precedente.

A negação da proposição R pode ser expressa por “Ou a votação do deputado é favorável, ou a legenda recomendou o voto favorável e o deputado não é favorável à matéria.”.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

46) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: “Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?”

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The author mocks his wife's driving skills.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

62) Prostate-Cancer Screening

To screen or not to screen? When it comes to cancer, doctors say early detection is the best defense. But the picture is a little fuzzier when it comes to prostate cancer, which in many cases progresses slowly and may not require aggressive treatment. In March, a 10-year National Cancer Institute study involving more than 76,000 men seemed to make the case for watchful waiting. About half of the study volunteers were randomly assigned to the screening group, getting either a manual exam or a prostate-specific antigen test each year; the latter test measures blood levels of a protein associated with prostate cancer. The other study participants received no screening guidance and were left to decide on their own whether they would get a yearly test. At the seven-year mark, 50 men had died from prostate cancer in the screening group, and 44 had died in the usual-care group. In other words, screening and early detection did not lower the death rate from prostate cancer.

Based on this and other studies, the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force said there was insufficient evidence to assess the balance of benefits and harms of prostate-cancer screening in men younger than age 75. The task force recommended against prostate-cancer screening in men 75 and older.

Internet: <www.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

One group of volunteers was subjected to manual examination while the other had an antigen test.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

10) The role of the police in a healthy democracy is radically different from their role in authoritarian societies. In autocratic regimes, the police serve mainly to protect not the people, but the regime. The police are therefore typically politicized, with appointments being part of the patronage system that rewards regime loyalists. Police officers spend a great deal of time spying on the populace to unmask political opposition; crime against citizens is less of a concern. Abuse and corruption are usually rife, because police are not held accountable for their actions. Rather, political leaders tolerate abuses by the police in return for police loyalty to the regime.

By contrast, in democratic societies the primary mission of the police is to protect citizens against crime and disorder, including illegal or corrupt behavior by officials. In democracies, police have carefully circumscribed roles that require close and positive relations with ordinary citizens. The use of arms and pursuit of criminals are rare and take up only a tiny fraction of police time. Instead, police officers spend the vast bulk of their time building relationships with the community through patrols, community-enhancing activities, and listening to citizens. The goal of democratic policing is to build a web of relationships between the community and the police that helps to control crime by making police aware of the persons and activities in the communities that they are assigned to protect and by inclining citizens to trust and cooperate with police. This also achieves the primary goal of making citizens feel secure in their daily activities, thereby fostering a climate that encourages increased legitimate business activity, investment, and planning for the future.

Michael D. Wiatrowski and Jack A. Goldstone. The ballot and the badge: democratic policing. In: Journal of Democracy, Volume 21, Number 2. Internet: <muse.jhu.edu> (adapted).

Concerning the previous text, judge the following item.

According to the text, the limitations imposed on police work in democratic societies are motivated by the fact that the use of arms almost never happens.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

38) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

For the author, parking in New York is an occasion of great suspense because it is always a terrible experience.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

7) Leia o texto abaixo.

Little attention has been devoted to legislation's point of origin — the legislative drafting process. Such commentary as has been offered is essentially technical in nature. However, the relationship between drafter and text is the furthest thing from a technical, value-neutral enterprise.

For example: a question confronted by every drafter and one with obvious ethical and political implications is, "How much is to be left to the drafter's discretion?" Obviously, the drafter who less frequently inquires about the client's desires will have greater latitude to exercise discretion and accordingly can play more of an "advocacy" role in shaping the legislation, a situation which can lead to his or her sidestepping the duty of abiding by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation.

But this is not to paint too malevolent a portrait of legislative drafting personnel. They are not a fifth column of subversives who pursue personal advocacy objectives in everything that they do. Indeed, many may even be unaware of their power. They are, though, continually called upon to exercise personal judgment in the performance of their duties. Such judgments are frequently policy judgments, and drafting decisions are often influenced consciously or subconsciously by the advocacy agenda of the individual drafter. The legislative drafter plays a more active role in the process than is generally accorded to the stereotypical scribe, laboring in nameless and faceless obscurity to produce a bill draft.

David Marcello. The Ethics and Politics of Legislative Drafting. In: Tulane Law Review, vol. 70, p. 2437, 1996 (adapted).

About the preceding text, judge the following item.

By using the expressions "advocacy' role" (second sentence of the second paragraph) and "advocacy agenda" (forth sentence of the third paragraph), the author is referring specifically to people who have a degree in law and work in the legislative branch.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Engenheiro/Engenharia Mecânica/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

66) For many years, researchers have drawn attention to the importance of alignment between business and Information Technology (IT). In early studies, this often meant linking the business plan and the IT plan. Another perspective involved ensuring congruence between the business strategy and the IT strategy. Still another has required examining the fit between business needs and information system priorities. These conceptualizations have been enlarged over time and now research recognizes many points of alignment between business and IT.

Early motivation for alignment emerged from a focus on strategic business planning and long-range IT planning in the early 1980s. From a business perspective, planning was characterized as a top-down and a bottom-up process and departmental (e.g., IT) plans were created in support of corporate strategies. From an IT perspective, decisions on hardware and software had such long-term implications that tying them to current and future plans of the organizational unit was a practical necessity.

The business and IT performance implications of alignment have been demonstrated empirically and through case studies during the last decade. Simply put, the findings support the hypothesis that those organizations that successfully align their business strategy with their IT strategy will outperform those that do not. Alignment leads to more focused and strategic use of IT which, in turn, leads to increased performance.

Internet: <www.palgrave-journals.com> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

From a business perspective, planning was characterized as a top-down and a bottom-up process as well.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764625

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

27) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Some lawyers have considered the possibility of sending parents to prison if they missed meetings with teachers.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857066

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Substituição de Palavras e Reescrita de Frases (Inglês)

78) Leia o texto abaixo.

Little attention has been devoted to legislation's point of origin — the legislative drafting process. Such commentary as has been offered is essentially technical in nature. However, the relationship between drafter and text is the furthest thing from a technical, value-neutral enterprise.

For example: a question confronted by every drafter and one with obvious ethical and political implications is, "How much is to be left to the drafter's discretion?" Obviously, the drafter who less frequently inquires about the client's desires will have greater latitude to exercise discretion and accordingly can play more of an "advocacy" role in shaping the legislation, a situation which can lead to his or her sidestepping the duty of abiding by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation.

But this is not to paint too malevolent a portrait of legislative drafting personnel. They are not a fifth column of subversives who pursue personal advocacy objectives in everything that they do. Indeed, many may even be unaware of their power. They are, though, continually called upon to exercise personal judgment in the performance of their duties. Such judgments are frequently policy judgments, and drafting decisions are often influenced consciously or subconsciously by the advocacy agenda of the individual drafter. The legislative drafter plays a more active role in the process than is generally accorded to the stereotypical scribe, laboring in nameless and faceless obscurity to produce a bill draft.

David Marcello. The Ethics and Politics of Legislative Drafting.
In: Tulane Law Review, vol. 70, p. 2437, 1996 (adapted).

About the preceding text, judge the following item.

The fragment of a sentence "greater latitude to exercise discretion" (second sentence of the second paragraph) can be, without this changing the original meaning of the text, replaced with greater possibilities to be discreet.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764331

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

28) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

In the episode narrated, there were only three people in the car.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960619

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Referência, Anáfora e Catáfora (Língua Inglesa)

84) The security risks faced by Parliaments, legislatures, elected representatives, and the officials who support them, differ greatly according to their evolving national and local circumstances, among other things. For some, the biggest security risks may stem from disruptive protesters and cyber criminals, but terrorism may pose the most concerning risks for others. In fact, threat actors differ enormously in their intentions and capabilities, which also change over time.

Given that risk is a product of threat, vulnerability, and impact, it follows that ultimately there are only three ways to reduce security risk — namely, by reducing the threat, reducing the vulnerability, or reducing the impact (or some combination thereof). Reducing the threat element of security risk is difficult, especially in the case of determined and capable threat actors. Responsibility for reducing threats tends to lie mainly with national law enforcement, security, and intelligence agencies. That said, parliaments and other organisations can contribute to threat reduction through deterrence — in other words, by influencing the intentions of threat actors. Carefully crafted security-minded communications can convey a discouraging message to potential attackers, to the effect that they should expect to confront professional security measures and face a substantial risk of being caught. For instance, a parliamentary website might advertise that visitors will undergo 'airport-style screening', without explaining precisely what that entails. The public should be reassured by such message, whereas some threat actors might be deterred.

Paul Martin. Parliamentary security: an introductory guide. Internet: <www.cpahq.org> (adapted).

Considering the preceding text, judge the following item.

In the excerpt "threat actors differ enormously in their intentions and capabilities, which also change over time", "which" refers to "threat actors".

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764330

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

56) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The article admits there are two ways of dealing with the problem of truancy.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960624

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Raciocínio Lógico - Tabela Verdade das Proposições Compostas

86) R: "Se o deputado não é favorável à matéria, então a votação do deputado é favorável se, e somente se, a legenda recomendar o voto favorável."

Julgue o item seguinte, acerca da proposição R precedente.

A proposição R terá valor lógico falso apenas nos casos em que for verdadeiro o valor lógico da proposição simples "O deputado não é favorável à matéria."

Certo

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764627

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

64) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The novelty of fining students who play truant is shocking to most people in the USA.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764630

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

55) Prostate-Cancer Screening

To screen or not to screen? When it comes to cancer, doctors say early detection is the best defense. But the picture is a little fuzzier when it comes to prostate cancer, which in many cases progresses slowly and may not require aggressive treatment. In March, a 10-year National Cancer Institute study involving more than 76,000 men seemed to make the case for watchful waiting. About half of the study volunteers were randomly assigned to the screening group, getting either a manual exam or a prostate-specific antigen test each year; the latter test measures blood levels of a protein associated with prostate cancer. The other study participants received no screening guidance and were left to decide on their own whether they would get a yearly test. At the seven-year mark, 50 men had died from prostate cancer in the screening group, and 44 had died in the usual-care group. In other words, screening and early detection did not lower the death rate from prostate cancer.

Based on this and other studies, the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force said there was insufficient evidence to assess the balance of benefits and harms of prostate-cancer screening in men younger than age 75. The task force recommended against prostate-cancer screening in men 75 and older.

Internet: <www.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The institute that conducted the research cannot be considered traditional since it is relatively new.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857075

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

15) Leia o texto abaixo.

When conducting a survey on the use of technology in the legislative process, one of the questions I asked was "Has the legislature, as an institution or in part, resisted technology based changes?" I asked this question based on my own experience with the Massachusetts Legislature. I spent 9 years working with legislators and senior staff, and the way they sometimes approached technology was at times comical—at times frightening. My friends and I watched on—and laughed—the first time a laptop computer or an iPhone made its way onto the floor of the Massachusetts House or Senate and the members gathered around it, acting as though they were looking at an artifact that had been dropped from Mars. I also saw an older legislative drafter become befuddled and angry when he was forced to start using the "track changes" and "comment" functions on Microsoft Word rather than marking up a bill with his beloved red pencil.

Sean J. Kealy. Technology & Legislative Drafting In The United States.
Internet: <sites.bu.edu> (adapted).

Judge the following item concerning the previous text.

When conducting his survey, the author met an older drafter who did not want to change the way he worked with bills and red pencils.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/3962874

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Raciocínio Lógico - Argumentos - Métodos Decorrentes da Tabela Verdade

96) No que se refere a lógica de primeira ordem e lógica de argumentação, julgue o seguinte item.

Considere as seguintes proposições de determinado deputado:

A: "Se eu não voto favorável à matéria, serei punido pela legenda.";

B: “Se sou punido pela legenda, posso decepcionar os eleitores.”;

C: “Vou votar favorável à matéria.”.

Com base no argumento cujas premissas sejam as proposições A, B e C, é correto concluir que os eleitores não poderão ficar decepcionados.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1765198

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

43) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: “Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?”

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The writer believes that family life is somewhat similar to parking in New York.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764629

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

67) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

There are schools which award students iPads if they never miss a day during a school year.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857080

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

11) Leia o texto abaixo.

When conducting a survey on the use of technology in the legislative process, one of the questions I asked was “Has the legislature, as an institution or in part, resisted technology based changes?” I asked this question based on my own experience with the Massachusetts Legislature. I spent 9 years working with legislators and senior staff, and the way they sometimes approached technology was at times comical—at times frightening. My friends and I watched on—and laughed—the first time a laptop computer or an iPhone made its way onto the floor of the Massachusetts House or Senate and the members gathered around it, acting as though they were looking at an artifact that had been dropped from Mars. I also saw an older legislative drafter become befuddled and angry when he was forced to start using the “track changes” and “comment” functions on Microsoft Word rather than marking up a bill with his beloved red pencil.

Sean J. Kealy. Technology & Legislative Drafting In The United States.
Internet: <sites.bu.edu> (adapted).

Judge the following item concerning the previous text.

The negative way some legislators reacted to technology sometimes scared the author of the text.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Engenheiro/Engenharia Mecânica/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

35) For many years, researchers have drawn attention to the importance of alignment between business and Information Technology (IT). In early studies, this often meant linking the business plan and the IT plan. Another perspective involved ensuring congruence between the business strategy and the IT strategy. Still another has required examining the fit between business needs and information system priorities. These conceptualizations have been enlarged over time and now research recognizes many points of alignment between business and IT.

Early motivation for alignment emerged from a focus on strategic business planning and long-range IT planning in the early 1980s. From a business perspective, planning was characterized as a top-down and a bottom-up process and departmental (e.g., IT) plans were created in support of corporate strategies. From an IT perspective, decisions on hardware and software had such long-term implications that tying them to current and future plans of the organizational unit was a practical necessity.

The business and IT performance implications of alignment have been demonstrated empirically and through case studies during the last decade. Simply put, the findings support the hypothesis that those organizations that successfully align their business strategy with their IT strategy will outperform those that do not. Alignment leads to more focused and strategic use of IT which, in turn, leads to increased performance.

Internet: <www.palgrave-journals.com> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

Alignment between business and IT has always been related to examining the fit between business needs and information system priorities.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Significado de Palavras e Expressões (Sinônimos, Antônimos, Parônimos, Denotação, Conotação, etc.)

72) As far back as 4000 B.C., historians believe, formal record-keeping systems were first instituted by organized businesses and governments in the Near East to allay their concerns about correctly accounting for receipts and disbursements and collecting taxes. Similar developments occurred with respect to the Zhao dynasty in China (1122-256 B.C.). The need for and indications of audits can be traced back to public finance systems in Babylonia, Greece, the Roman Empire, the City States of Italy, etc., all of which developed a detailed system of checks and counterchecks. Specifically, these governments were worried about incompetent officials prone to making bookkeeping errors and inaccuracies as well as corrupt officials who were motivated to perpetrate fraud whenever the opportunity arose. Even the Bible (referring to the period between 1800 B.C. and A.D. 95) explains the basic rationale for instituting controls rather straightforwardly: "...if employees have an opportunity to steal they may take advantage of it." The Bible also contains examples of good internal control practices, such as dual custody of assets, restriction of access to assets, and segregation of duties, as well as examples of the need for competent and honest employees. Historically then, the emergence of double-entry bookkeeping in circa 1494 A.D. can be directly traced to the critical need for exercising stewardship and control. Throughout European history, for instance, fraud cases — such as the South Sea bubble of the 18th century, and the tulip scandal — provided the justification for exercising more control over managers.

S. Ramamoorti. Internal auditing: history, evolution, and prospects. p. 3. Internet: <https://na.theiia.org> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

The word "allay" is used as a verb and it means reduce or ease.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

50) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The couple's feelings as they get near home are expressed as a struggle between hope and discouragement.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

45) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Kelt Cooper's proposal resulted in a debate about fining truancy in a city of the state of Connecticut.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857088

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Raciocínio Lógico - Argumentos - Métodos Decorrentes da Tabela Verdade

95) P: "Maria pagou e não assistiu."

Q: "João assistiu sem pagar."

No que concerne às proposições P e Q apresentadas anteriormente, julgue o item seguinte.

A falsidade da proposição "Se P, então Q" permite que se infira corretamente que João não assistiu.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251698

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

20) As far back as 4000 B.C., historians believe, formal record-keeping systems were first instituted by organized businesses and governments in the Near East to allay their concerns about correctly accounting for receipts and disbursements and collecting taxes. Similar developments occurred with respect to the Zhao dynasty in China (1122-256 B.C.). The need for and indications of audits can be traced back to public finance systems in Babylonia, Greece, the Roman Empire, the City States of Italy, etc., all of which developed a detailed system of checks and counterchecks. Specifically, these governments were worried about incompetent officials prone to making bookkeeping errors and inaccuracies as well as corrupt officials who were motivated to perpetrate fraud whenever the opportunity arose. Even the Bible (referring to the period between 1800 B.C. and A.D. 95) explains the basic rationale for instituting controls rather straightforwardly: "...if employees have an opportunity to steal they may take advantage of it." The Bible also contains examples of good internal control practices, such as dual custody of assets, restriction of access to assets, and segregation of duties, as well as examples of the need for competent and honest employees. Historically then, the emergence of double-entry bookkeeping in circa 1494 A.D. can be directly traced to the critical need for exercising stewardship and control. Throughout European history, for instance, fraud cases — such as the South Sea bubble of the 18th century, and the tulip scandal — provided the justification for exercising more control over managers.

S. Ramamoorti. Internal auditing: history, evolution, and prospects. p. 3. Internet: <<https://na.theiia.org>> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

The author points to a discontinuity in the history of financial bookkeeping from the end of the 15th century to the 18th century.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764325

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

65) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Years ago students could be sent to prison if they skipped classes.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

25) Shining a light on the auditors

Every financial meltdown prompts a hunt for scapegoats. In the wake of the most recent one, calls to reform accounting have grown particularly loud, and action is on the way. In the coming months both America and the European Union are expected to introduce new rules aimed at enhancing auditors' independence. But for all the heated debate over the changes, any improvement is likely to be modest.

America's bean-counters were effectively self-regulating until 2002. That year, following a wave of accounting scandals, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley act to reform corporate governance. It limited the consulting work firms could do for their audit clients and set up a new regulator, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. At a meeting on December 4th it outlined three policies it expects to implement by the end of 2014.

One aims to make audit reports more useful by requiring a section highlighting "critical audit matters" — the high-stakes judgment calls that keep accountants up at night, such as how the business being audited has valued its intangible assets. Another would cut the share of an audit that accounting firms can outsource without disclosure from 20% to 5%. Such information is valuable in emerging markets, where local accountants vary widely in quality. The most controversial reform would identify by name the lead partner responsible for each audit.

Although identifying partners does not increase their legal liability, it does put their reputation on the line. This seems to make accountants more cautious.

The Economist, December 7th 2013, p. 68 (adapted).

Judge the item below, based on the text above.

The idea expressed in the second paragraph can be correctly explained by the following sentence: In 2002 a draft bill was voted by the American Congress proposing the setting of enhanced standard for all US state-owned-company boards, management and public accounting firms.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

53) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

For the author, parking in New York is an occasion of great suspense because it is always a terrible experience.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

22) Shining a light on the auditors

Every financial meltdown prompts a hunt for scapegoats. In the wake of the most recent one, calls to reform accounting have grown particularly loud, and action is on the way. In the coming months both America and the European Union are expected to introduce new rules aimed at enhancing auditors' independence. But for all the heated debate over the changes, any improvement is likely to be modest.

America's bean-counters were effectively self-regulating until 2002. That year, following a wave of accounting scandals, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley act to reform corporate governance. It limited the consulting work firms could do for their audit clients and set up a new regulator, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. At a meeting on December 4th it outlined three policies it expects to implement by the end of 2014.

One aims to make audit reports more useful by requiring a section highlighting "critical audit matters" — the high-stakes judgment calls that keep accountants up at night, such as how the business being audited has valued its intangible assets. Another would cut the share of an audit that accounting firms can outsource without disclosure from 20% to 5%. Such information is valuable in emerging markets, where local accountants vary widely in quality. The most controversial reform would identify by name the lead partner responsible for each audit.

Although identifying partners does not increase their legal liability, it does put their reputation on the line. This seems to make accountants more cautious.

The Economist, December 7th 2013, p. 68 (adapted).

Judge the item below, based on the text above.

The title of the text refers to the fact that it is necessary to start regarding auditors as key players in today's globalized world.

Certo

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251717

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Substituição de Palavras e Reescrita de Frases (Inglês)

80) Shining a light on the auditors

Every financial meltdown prompts a hunt for scapegoats. In the wake of the most recent one, calls to reform accounting have grown particularly loud, and action is on the way. In the coming months both America and the European Union are expected to introduce new rules aimed at enhancing auditors' independence. But for all the heated debate over the changes, any improvement is likely to be modest.

America's bean-counters were effectively self-regulating until 2002. That year, following a wave of accounting scandals, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley act to reform corporate governance. It limited the consulting work firms could do for their audit clients and set up a new regulator, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. At a meeting on December 4th it outlined three policies it expects to implement by the end of 2014.

One aims to make audit reports more useful by requiring a section highlighting "critical audit matters" — the high-stakes judgment calls that keep accountants up at night, such as how the business being audited has valued its intangible assets. Another would cut the share of an audit that accounting firms can outsource without disclosure from 20% to 5%. Such information is valuable in emerging markets, where local accountants vary widely in quality. The most controversial reform would identify by name the lead partner responsible for each audit.

Although identifying partners does not increase their legal liability, it does put their reputation on the line. This seems to make accountants more cautious.

The Economist, December 7th 2013, p. 68 (adapted).

Judge the item below, based on the text above.

If the expression "for all the" were replaced by despite the, the text would still be correct and the meaning of the sentence would be maintained, something that would not occur if it were replaced by if there is.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764634

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

37) Prostate-Cancer Screening

To screen or not to screen? When it comes to cancer, doctors say early detection is the best defense. But the picture is a little fuzzier when it comes to prostate cancer, which in many cases progresses slowly and may not require aggressive treatment. In March, a 10-year National Cancer Institute study involving more than 76,000 men seemed to make the case for watchful waiting. About half of the study volunteers were randomly assigned to the screening group, getting either a manual exam or a prostate-specific antigen test each year; the latter test measures blood levels of a protein associated with prostate cancer. The other study participants received no screening guidance and were left to decide on their own whether they would get a yearly test. At the seven-year mark, 50 men had died from prostate cancer in the screening group, and 44 had died in the usual-care group. In other words, screening and early detection did not lower the death rate from prostate cancer.

Based on this and other studies, the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force said there was insufficient evidence to assess the balance of benefits and harms of prostate-cancer screening in men younger than age 75. The task force recommended against prostate-cancer screening in men 75 and older.

Internet: <www.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The article indicates that imaging to detect prostate cancer is blurred and therefore not reliable.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251719

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

17) Shining a light on the auditors

Every financial meltdown prompts a hunt for scapegoats. In the wake of the most recent one, calls to reform accounting have grown particularly loud, and action is on the way. In the coming months both America and the European Union are expected to introduce new rules aimed at enhancing auditors' independence. But for all the heated debate over the changes, any improvement is likely to be modest.

America's bean-counters were effectively self-regulating until 2002. That year, following a wave of accounting scandals, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley act to reform corporate governance. It limited the consulting work firms could do for their audit clients and set up a new regulator, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. At a meeting on December 4th it outlined three policies it expects to implement by the end of 2014.

One aims to make audit reports more useful by requiring a section highlighting "critical audit matters" — the high-stakes judgment calls that keep accountants up at night, such as how the business being audited has valued its intangible assets. Another would cut the share of an audit that accounting firms can outsource without disclosure from 20% to 5%. Such information is valuable in emerging markets, where local accountants vary widely in quality. The most controversial reform would identify by name the lead partner responsible for each audit.

Although identifying partners does not increase their legal liability, it does put their reputation on the line. This seems to make accountants more cautious.

The Economist, December 7th 2013, p. 68 (adapted).

Judge the item below, based on the text above.

In line 4, "bean-counters" is a derogatory expression used to describe second-class accountants who deal specifically with agribusiness.

Certo

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1765185

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

58) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Years ago students could be sent to prison if they skipped classes.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1765192

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

51) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

In the episode narrated, there were only three people in the car.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764633

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

33) Prostate-Cancer Screening

To screen or not to screen? When it comes to cancer, doctors say early detection is the best defense. But the picture is a little fuzzier when it comes to prostate cancer, which in many cases progresses slowly and may not require aggressive treatment. In March, a 10-year National Cancer Institute study involving more than 76,000 men seemed to make the case for watchful waiting. About half of the study volunteers were randomly assigned to the screening group, getting either a manual exam or a prostate-specific antigen test each year; the latter test measures blood levels of a protein associated with prostate cancer. The other study participants received no screening guidance and were left to decide on their own whether they would get a yearly test. At the seven-year mark, 50 men had died from prostate cancer in the screening group, and 44 had died in the usual-care group. In other words, screening and early detection did not lower the death rate from prostate cancer.

Based on this and other studies, the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force said there was insufficient evidence to assess the balance of benefits and harms of prostate-cancer screening in men younger than age 75. The task force recommended against prostate-cancer screening in men 75 and older.

Internet: <www.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Although more people died from prostate cancer in the usual-care group, the difference was not substantial enough to indicate the importance of screening for men younger than 75.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960598

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Significado de Palavras e Expressões (Sinônimos, Antônimos, Parônimos, Denotação, Conotação, etc.)

71) The role of the police in a healthy democracy is radically different from their role in authoritarian societies. In autocratic regimes, the police serve mainly to protect not the people, but the regime. The police are therefore typically politicized, with appointments being part of the patronage system that rewards regime loyalists. Police officers spend a great deal of time spying on the populace to unmask political opposition; crime against citizens is less of a concern. Abuse and corruption are usually rife, because police are not held accountable for their actions. Rather, political leaders tolerate abuses by the police in return for police loyalty to the regime.

By contrast, in democratic societies the primary mission of the police is to protect citizens against crime and disorder, including illegal or corrupt behavior by officials. In democracies, police have carefully circumscribed roles that require close and positive relations with ordinary citizens. The use of arms and pursuit of criminals are rare and take up only a tiny fraction of police time. Instead, police officers spend the vast bulk of their time building relationships with the community through patrols, community-enhancing activities, and listening to citizens. The goal of democratic policing is to build a web of relationships between the community and the police that helps to control crime by making police aware of the persons and activities in the communities that they are assigned to protect and by inclining citizens to trust and cooperate with police. This also achieves the primary goal of making citizens feel secure in their daily activities, thereby fostering a climate that encourages increased legitimate business activity, investment, and planning for the future.

Michael D. Wiatrowski and Jack A. Goldstone. The ballot and the badge: democratic policing. In: Journal of Democracy, Volume 21, Number 2. Internet: <muse.jhu.edu> (adapted).

Concerning the previous text, judge the following item.

In the fragment "police have carefully circumscribed roles that require close and positive relations with ordinary citizens", "ordinary citizens" are people who represent the average citizen in a democratic society.

Certo
Errado

www.teccconcursos.com.br/questoes/1765354

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Registro e Redação/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

39) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <http://moneyland.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

A student in Los Angeles may be fined $ 250 for each day he skips classes.

Certo
Errado

www.teccconcursos.com.br/questoes/74906

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

60) Technology Legislation

Technology-related legislation can have a huge impact on growing businesses, and some interesting issues are likely to pop up with the new Congress of the United States this year. Of great interest to growing businesses are the topics of data protection and net neutrality.

Laws that lay out more stringent requirements for retaining and protecting employee and customer data could be on the horizon. "The laws that apply to big business are going to trickle down to small business," says Ann Westerheim, founder and president of technology consulting firm Ekaru. "Businesses need to have that on their radar. You don't want to get hit with a fine because you're not complying." She suggests looking at laws like Sarbanes-Oxley to get an idea of where new tech laws could be heading.

The good news is that proper data protection is something businesses should be doing anyway. "A lot of the measures required to protect employee and customer data are just good business practices," says Westerheim. Growing businesses can head off potential compliance costs by gradually shoring up their IT security and data protection now.

Net neutrality is likely to be a hot issue again after stalling in the Senate last year. Net neutrality proponents want regulations to prevent network providers from prioritizing certain Internet traffic. "Net neutrality is a big issue for small businesses," says Westerheim. A net neutrality law stands a better chance of passing with strong Democratic backing this year, but it figures to be a hard-fought battle. Digital copyright issues could also come to the fore in Congress. With the changes brought about by the last election, it will be an interesting year for entrepreneurs to keep an eye on the goings-on in Washington.

Internet: <www.microsoft.com>.

Judge the following item according to the text above.

The Senate has voted to retain net neutrality regulations.

Certo
Errado

www.teccconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857079

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

13) Leia o texto abaixo.

When conducting a survey on the use of technology in the legislative process, one of the questions I asked was “Has the legislature, as an institution or in part, resisted technology based changes?” I asked this question based on my own experience with the Massachusetts Legislature. I spent 9 years working with legislators and senior staff, and the way they sometimes approached technology was at times comical—at times frightening. My friends and I watched on—and laughed—the first time a laptop computer or an iPhone made its way onto the floor of the Massachusetts House or Senate and the members gathered around it, acting as though they were looking at an artifact that had been dropped from Mars. I also saw an older legislative drafter become befuddled and angry when he was forced to start using the “track changes” and “comment” functions on Microsoft Word rather than marking up a bill with his beloved red pencil.

Sean J. Kealy. Technology & Legislative Drafting In The United States.
Internet: <sites.bu.edu> (adapted).

Judge the following item concerning the previous text.

In his text, the author shows his skepticism about the use of technology in the legislative process.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764329

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

44) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Nowadays in LA students may be fined if they skip classes more than twice.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/74910

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

30) Privacy groups and lawmakers are calling for a new and broader investigation into Google and its privacy practices after the U.S. Federal Communications Commission (FCC) announced that it found no evidence that the company broke eavesdropping laws.

Late last week, the FCC reported that there was no legal precedent to find fault with Google collecting unprotected home Wi-Fi data, such as personal email, passwords and search histories, with its roaming Street View cars between 2007 and 2010. However, the FCC did fine Google $ 25,000 for obstructing its investigation.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), a national privacy watchdog, disagreed with the FCC findings. In a letter sent to U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder today, EPIC asked that the Department of Justice investigate Google's surreptitious collecting of Wi-Fi data from residential networks. U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, a senior member of the U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee, has also stepped into the fray.

"The circumstances surrounding Google's siphoning of personal information leave many unanswered questions," Markey said today in an email to Computerworld. "I believe Congress should immediately hold a hearing to get to the bottom of this serious situation."

Internet: <www.computerworld.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above it can be said that States' eavesdropping laws have been declared unconstitutional.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/1765357

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Registro e Redação/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

42) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The author believes his wife's option to go home with the kids or stay in the car and help him find a spot is a difficult choice.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764334

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

32) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The couple was sad because the baby was asleep and therefore could not enjoy the beautiful sunset.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74955

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012

Raciocínio Lógico - Tabela Verdade das Proposições Compostas

88) Em uma comissão parlamentar de inquérito, um lobista, ao esclarecer que não teria recebido dinheiro de certo empresário para pressionar pela aprovação de projeto de lei de interesse da empresa deste, assim argumentou: "Não conheço esse empresário nem ouvi falar de sua empresa. Se não conheço o empresário nem ouvi falar de sua empresa, não forneci meus dados bancários a ele. Se não forneci meus dados bancários a ele, ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta. Se ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta, eu não recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela aprovação desse projeto de lei. Logo, eu não ouvi falar dessa empresa nem recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela votação desse projeto de lei".

A partir da situação hipotética descrita acima, julgue o item a seguir.

Admitindo-se que a proposição "Eu não recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela aprovação desse projeto de lei" seja verdadeira, também será verdadeira a proposição "Se ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta, eu não recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela aprovação desse projeto de lei", mesmo que seja falsa a proposição "Ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta".

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251710

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

21) Shining a light on the auditors

Every financial meltdown prompts a hunt for scapegoats. In the wake of the most recent one, calls to reform accounting have grown particularly loud, and action is on the way. In the coming months both America and the European Union are expected to introduce new rules aimed at enhancing auditors' independence. But for all the heated debate over the changes, any improvement is likely to be modest.

America's bean-counters were effectively self-regulating until 2002. That year, following a wave of accounting scandals, Congress passed the Sarbanes-Oxley act to reform corporate governance. It limited the consulting work firms could do for their audit clients and set up a new regulator, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board. At a meeting on December 4th it outlined three policies it expects to implement by the end of 2014.

One aims to make audit reports more useful by requiring a section highlighting "critical audit matters" — the high-stakes judgment calls that keep accountants up at night, such as how the business being audited has valued its intangible assets. Another would cut the share of an audit that accounting firms can outsource without disclosure from 20% to 5%. Such information is valuable in emerging markets, where local accountants vary widely in quality. The most controversial reform would identify by name the lead partner responsible for each audit.

Although identifying partners does not increase their legal liability, it does put their reputation on the line. This seems to make accountants more cautious.

The Economist, December 7th 2013, p. 68 (adapted).

Judge the item below, based on the text above.

According to the text, Congress' underlying motivation to pass the Sarbanes-Oxley act was its indignation over the shameful behaviour of some corporations in early 21st century.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960617

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Conjunções e Conectivos (Conjunctions e Linking Words)

70) The security risks faced by Parliaments, legislatures, elected representatives, and the officials who support them, differ greatly according to their evolving national and local circumstances, among other things. For some, the biggest security risks may stem from disruptive protesters and cyber criminals, but terrorism may pose the most concerning risks for others. In fact, threat actors differ enormously in their intentions and capabilities, which also change over time.

Given that risk is a product of threat, vulnerability, and impact, it follows that ultimately there are only three ways to reduce security risk — namely, by reducing the threat, reducing the vulnerability, or reducing the impact (or some combination thereof). Reducing the threat element of security risk is difficult, especially in the case of determined and capable threat actors. Responsibility for reducing threats tends to lie mainly with national law enforcement, security, and intelligence agencies. That said, parliaments and other organisations can contribute to threat reduction through deterrence — in other words, by influencing the intentions of threat actors. Carefully crafted security-minded communications can convey a discouraging message to potential attackers, to the effect that they should expect to confront professional security measures and face a substantial risk of being caught. For instance, a parliamentary website might advertise that visitors will undergo 'airport-style screening', without explaining precisely what that entails. The public should be reassured by such message, whereas some threat actors might be deterred.

Paul Martin. Parliamentary security: an introductory guide. Internet: <www.cpahq.org> (adapted).

Considering the preceding text, judge the following item.

In the second paragraph, both "Given that", in "Given that risk is a product of threat", and "to the effect that", in "can convey a discouraging message to potential attackers, to the effect that they should expect to confront professional security measures" can be respectively replaced with Because and because without this changing the original meaning of the text.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/251726

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Referênciação, Anáfora e Catáfora (Língua Inglesa)

85) A compelling case can be made for mandatory audit rotation that auditors who keep the same client for too long get excessively cosy with its management. As somebody has put it, "When the same incumbent firm has been in place for 100 years, to me that's not an audit, that's a joint venture."

Most academic studies have either found no link between the length of a relationship and its quality, or determined that longer tenures yield better results, because the accountants have time to master the intricacies of clients' businesses. Obliging companies to solicit bids at regular intervals, as Britain does, has shaken up the business: HSBC said in August that it will drop KPMG in favour of PwC; on December 2nd Unilever announced that it is making the opposite switch. Indeed, the big accounting firms argue that forced rotation would reduce competition by preventing the incumbent from bidding.

Proponents counter that the accounting giants, and academics whose research is often financed by them, have good reason to resist change. Among the reform's strongest supporters are smaller firms that hope to break the Big Four's stranglehold.

Yet even the most vocal advocates of mandatory rotation concede that it is no magic bullet. Auditors have a conflict of interest at the heart of their business — they are paid by the companies they are supposed to assess objectively. Unless that changes, there will be no substitute for investors doing their own due diligence.

Idem (adapted).

Judge the following item, according to the text above.

In "to me that's not an audit, that's a joint venture", the word "that" refers to the situation mentioned before, that is, the same auditing firm being responsible for a client for too long a period of time.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1765195

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

31) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The author believes his wife's option to go home with the kids or stay in the car and help him find a spot is a difficult choice.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764628

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Médico/Neurologia/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

49) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <<http://moneyland.time.com>> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The article admits there are two ways of dealing with the problem of truancy.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/74907

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

61) Privacy groups and lawmakers are calling for a new and broader investigation into Google and its privacy practices after the U.S. Federal Communications Commission (FCC) announced that it found no evidence that the company broke eavesdropping laws.

Late last week, the FCC reported that there was no legal precedent to find fault with Google collecting unprotected home Wi-Fi data, such as personal email, passwords and search histories, with its roaming Street View cars between 2007 and 2010. However, the FCC did fine Google $ 25,000 for obstructing its investigation.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center (EPIC), a national privacy watchdog, disagreed with the FCC findings. In a letter sent to U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder today, EPIC asked that the Department of Justice investigate Google's surreptitious collecting of Wi-Fi data from residential networks. U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, a senior member of the U.S. House Energy and Commerce Committee, has also stepped into the fray.

"The circumstances surrounding Google's siphoning of personal information leave many unanswered questions," Markey said today in an email to Computerworld. "I believe Congress should immediately hold a hearing to get to the bottom of this serious situation."

Internet: <www.computerworld.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above it can be said that

Google has been imposed a penalty for obstructing an investigation by a US regulatory agency into its controversial data collection for its Street View project.

Certo
Errado

www.teconconcursos.com.br/questoes/74905

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

41) Technology Legislation

Technology-related legislation can have a huge impact on growing businesses, and some interesting issues are likely to pop up with the new Congress of the United States this year. Of great interest to growing businesses are the topics of data protection and net neutrality.

Laws that lay out more stringent requirements for retaining and protecting employee and customer data could be on the horizon. "The laws that apply to big business are going to trickle down to small business," says Ann Westerheim, founder and president of technology consulting firm Ekaru. "Businesses need to have that on their radar. You don't want to get hit with a fine because you're not complying." She suggests looking at laws like Sarbanes-Oxley to get an idea of where new tech laws could be heading.

The good news is that proper data protection is something businesses should be doing anyway. "A lot of the measures required to protect employee and customer data are just good business practices," says Westerheim. Growing businesses can head off potential compliance costs by gradually shoring up their IT security and data protection now.

Net neutrality is likely to be a hot issue again after stalling in the Senate last year. Net neutrality proponents want regulations to prevent network providers from prioritizing certain Internet traffic. "Net neutrality is a big issue for small businesses," says Westerheim. A net neutrality law stands a better chance of passing with strong Democratic backing this year, but it figures to be a hard-fought battle. Digital copyright issues could also come to the fore in Congress. With the changes brought about by the last election, it will be an interesting year for entrepreneurs to keep an eye on the goings-on in Washington.

Internet: <www.microsoft.com>.

Judge the following item according to the text above.

Growing businesses can keep potential compliance costs from rising by gradually strengthening IT security and data protection.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857068

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Referênciação, Anáfora e Catáfora (Língua Inglesa)

83) Leia o texto abaixo.

Little attention has been devoted to legislation's point of origin — the legislative drafting process. Such commentary as has been offered is essentially technical in nature. However, the relationship between drafter and text is the furthest thing from a technical, value-neutral enterprise.

For example: a question confronted by every drafter and one with obvious ethical and political implications is, "How much is to be left to the drafter's discretion?" Obviously, the drafter who less frequently inquires about the client's desires will have greater latitude to exercise discretion and accordingly can play more of an "advocacy" role in shaping the legislation, a situation which can lead to his or her sidestepping the duty of abiding by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation.

But this is not to paint too malevolent a portrait of legislative drafting personnel. They are not a fifth column of subversives who pursue personal advocacy objectives in everything that they do. Indeed, many may even be unaware of their power. They are, though, continually called upon to exercise personal judgment in the performance of their duties. Such judgments are frequently policy judgments, and drafting decisions are often influenced consciously or subconsciously by the advocacy agenda of the individual drafter. The legislative drafter plays a more active role in the process than is generally accorded to the stereotypical scribe, laboring in nameless and faceless obscurity to produce a bill draft.

David Marcello. The Ethics and Politics of Legislative Drafting.
In: Tulane Law Review, vol. 70, p. 2437, 1996 (adapted).

About the preceding text, judge the following item.

In "But this is not to paint too malevolent a portrait" (first sentence of the third paragraph), "this" does not refer to a specific previous word, but to the entire statement made in the second paragraph.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74903

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Significado de Palavras e Expressões (Sinônimos, Antônimos, Parônimos, Denotação, Conotação, etc.)

76) Technology Legislation

Technology-related legislation can have a huge impact on growing businesses, and some interesting issues are likely to pop up with the new Congress of the United States this year. Of great interest to growing businesses are the topics of data protection and net neutrality.

Laws that lay out more stringent requirements for retaining and protecting employee and customer data could be on the horizon. "The laws that apply to big business are going to trickle down to small business," says Ann Westerheim, founder and president of technology consulting firm Ekaru. "Businesses need to have that on their radar. You don't want to get hit with a fine because you're not complying." She suggests looking at laws like Sarbanes-Oxley to get an idea of where new tech laws could be heading.

The good news is that proper data protection is something businesses should be doing anyway. "A lot of the measures required to protect employee and customer data are just good business practices," says Westerheim. Growing businesses can head off potential compliance costs by gradually shoring up their IT security and data protection now.

Net neutrality is likely to be a hot issue again after stalling in the Senate last year. Net neutrality proponents want regulations to prevent network providers from prioritizing certain Internet traffic. "Net neutrality is a big issue for small businesses," says Westerheim. A net neutrality law stands a better chance of passing with strong Democratic backing this year, but it figures to be a hard-fought battle. Digital copyright issues could also come to the fore in Congress. With the changes brought about by the last election, it will be an interesting year for entrepreneurs to keep an eye on the goings-on in Washington.

Internet: <www.microsoft.com>.

Judge the following item according to the text above.

In the text, the verb to comply, in 'You don't want to get hit with a fine because you're not complying', means to act in accordance with.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764333

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

63) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The author mocks his wife's driving skills.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857073

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

1) Leia o texto abaixo.

Little attention has been devoted to legislation's point of origin — the legislative drafting process. Such commentary as has been offered is essentially technical in nature. However, the relationship between drafter and text is the furthest thing from a technical, value-neutral enterprise.

For example: a question confronted by every drafter and one with obvious ethical and political implications is, "How much is to be left to the drafter's discretion?" Obviously, the drafter who less frequently inquires about the client's desires will have greater latitude to exercise discretion and accordingly can play more of an "advocacy" role in shaping the legislation, a situation which can lead to his or her sidestepping the duty of abiding by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation.

But this is not to paint too malevolent a portrait of legislative drafting personnel. They are not a fifth column of subversives who pursue personal advocacy objectives in everything that they do. Indeed, many may even be unaware of their power. They are, though, continually called upon to exercise personal judgment in the performance of their duties. Such judgments are frequently policy judgments, and drafting decisions are often influenced consciously or subconsciously by the advocacy agenda of the individual drafter. The legislative drafter plays a more active role in the process than is generally accorded to the stereotypical scribe, laboring in nameless and faceless obscurity to produce a bill draft.

David Marcello. The Ethics and Politics of Legislative Drafting.
In: Tulane Law Review, vol. 70, p. 2437, 1996 (adapted).

About the preceding text, judge the following item.

The text confronts the idea of neutrality of those whose work is to write texts that may become law.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74954

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012
Raciocínio Lógico - Equivalências Lógicas (Inclui Negação de Proposições Compostas)

93) Em uma comissão parlamentar de inquérito, um lobista, ao esclarecer que não teria recebido dinheiro de certo empresário para pressionar pela aprovação de projeto de lei de interesse da empresa deste, assim argumentou: "Não conheço esse empresário nem ouvi falar de sua empresa. Se não conheço o empresário nem ouvi falar de sua empresa, não forneci meus dados bancários a ele. Se não forneci meus dados bancários a ele, ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta. Se ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta, eu não recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela aprovação desse projeto de lei. Logo, eu não ouvi falar dessa empresa nem recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela votação desse projeto de lei".

A partir da situação hipotética descrita acima, julgue o item a seguir.

A negação da proposição "Não conheço esse empresário nem ouvi falar de sua empresa" pode ser expressa por "Conheço esse empresário e ouvi falar de sua empresa".

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960611

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

4) The role of the police in a healthy democracy is radically different from their role in authoritarian societies. In autocratic regimes, the police serve mainly to protect not the people, but the regime. The police are therefore typically politicized, with appointments being part of the patronage system that rewards regime loyalists. Police officers spend a great deal of time spying on the populace to unmask political opposition; crime against citizens is less of a concern. Abuse and corruption are usually rife, because police are not held accountable for their actions. Rather, political leaders tolerate abuses by the police in return for police loyalty to the regime.

By contrast, in democratic societies the primary mission of the police is to protect citizens against crime and disorder, including illegal or corrupt behavior by officials. In democracies, police have carefully circumscribed roles that require close and positive relations with ordinary citizens. The use of arms and pursuit of criminals are rare and take up only a tiny fraction of police time. Instead, police officers spend the vast bulk of their time building relationships with the community through patrols, community-enhancing activities, and listening to citizens. The goal of democratic policing is to build a web of relationships between the community and the police that helps to control crime by making police aware of the persons and activities in the communities that they are assigned to protect and by inclining citizens to trust and cooperate with police. This also achieves the primary goal of making citizens feel secure in their daily activities, thereby fostering a climate that encourages increased legitimate business activity, investment, and planning for the future.

Michael D. Wiatrowski and Jack A. Goldstone. The ballot and the badge: democratic policing. In: Journal of Democracy, Volume 21, Number 2. Internet: <muse.jhu.edu> (adapted).

Concerning the previous text, judge the following item.

In the sentence "The police are therefore typically politicized, with appointments being part of the patronage system that rewards regime loyalists", the authors imply that, in authoritarian societies, proper qualification may not suffice for someone to become a police officer.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857061

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

14) Leia o texto abaixo.

Little attention has been devoted to legislation's point of origin — the legislative drafting process. Such commentary as has been offered is essentially technical in nature. However, the relationship between drafter and text is the furthest thing from a technical, value-neutral enterprise.

For example: a question confronted by every drafter and one with obvious ethical and political implications is, "How much is to be left to the drafter's discretion?" Obviously, the drafter who less frequently inquires about the client's desires will have greater latitude to exercise discretion and accordingly can play more of an "advocacy" role in shaping the legislation, a situation which can lead to his or her sidestepping the duty of abiding by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation.

But this is not to paint too malevolent a portrait of legislative drafting personnel. They are not a fifth column of subversives who pursue personal advocacy objectives in everything that they do. Indeed, many may even be unaware of their power. They are, though, continually called upon to exercise personal judgment in the performance of their duties. Such judgments are frequently policy judgments, and drafting decisions are often influenced consciously or subconsciously by the advocacy agenda of the individual drafter. The legislative drafter plays a more active role in the process than is generally accorded to the stereotypical scribe, laboring in nameless and faceless obscurity to produce a bill draft.

David Marcello. The Ethics and Politics of Legislative Drafting.
In: Tulane Law Review, vol. 70, p. 2437, 1996 (adapted).

About the preceding text, judge the following item.

The main point of the text is to reveal how drafters can deliberately manipulate the drafting process according to their own interests.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960622

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Referênciação, Anáfora e Catáfora (Língua Inglesa)

82) The security risks faced by Parliaments, legislatures, elected representatives, and the officials who support them, differ greatly according to their evolving national and local circumstances, among other things. For some, the biggest security risks may stem from disruptive protesters and cyber criminals, but terrorism may pose the most concerning risks for others. In fact, threat actors differ enormously in their intentions and capabilities, which also change over time.

Given that risk is a product of threat, vulnerability, and impact, it follows that ultimately there are only three ways to reduce security risk — namely, by reducing the threat, reducing the vulnerability, or reducing the impact (or some combination thereof). Reducing the threat element of security risk is difficult, especially in the case of determined and capable threat actors. Responsibility for reducing threats tends to lie mainly with national law enforcement, security, and intelligence agencies. That said, parliaments and other organisations can contribute to threat reduction through deterrence — in other words, by influencing the intentions of threat actors. Carefully crafted security-minded communications can convey a discouraging message to potential attackers, to the effect that they should expect to confront professional security measures and face a substantial risk of being caught. For instance, a parliamentary website might advertise that visitors will undergo 'airport-style screening', without explaining precisely what that entails. The public should be reassured by such message, whereas some threat actors might be deterred.

Paul Martin. Parliamentary security: an introductory guide. Internet: <www.cpahq.org> (adapted).

Considering the preceding text, judge the following item.

The passage "some combination thereof", in "reducing the threat, reducing the vulnerability, or reducing the impact (or some combination thereof)", necessarily indicates a combination of the two last factors mentioned: vulnerability reduction and impact reduction.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74901

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Engenheiro/Engenharia Mecânica/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

40) For many years, researchers have drawn attention to the importance of alignment between business and Information Technology (IT). In early studies, this often meant linking the business plan and the IT plan. Another perspective involved ensuring congruence between the business strategy and the IT strategy. Still another has required examining the fit between business needs and information system priorities. These conceptualizations have been enlarged over time and now research recognizes many points of alignment between business and IT.

Early motivation for alignment emerged from a focus on strategic business planning and long-range IT planning in the early 1980s. From a business perspective, planning was characterized as a top-down and a bottom-up process and departmental (e.g., IT) plans were created in support of corporate strategies. From an IT perspective, decisions on hardware and software had such long-term implications that tying them to current and future plans of the organizational unit was a practical necessity.

The business and IT performance implications of alignment have been demonstrated empirically and through case studies during the last decade. Simply put, the findings support the hypothesis that those organizations that successfully align their business strategy with their IT strategy will outperform those that do not. Alignment leads to more focused and strategic use of IT which, in turn, leads to increased performance.

Internet: <www.palgrave-journals.com> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

The text leads to the conclusion that alignment is not always desirable.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3857077

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

12) Leia o texto abaixo.

When conducting a survey on the use of technology in the legislative process, one of the questions I asked was "Has the legislature, as an institution or in part, resisted technology based changes?" I asked this question based on my own experience with the Massachusetts Legislature. I spent 9 years working with legislators and senior staff, and the way they sometimes approached technology was at times comical—at times frightening. My friends and I watched on—and laughed—the first time a laptop computer or an iPhone made its way onto the floor of the Massachusetts House or Senate and the members gathered around it, acting as though they were looking at an artifact that had been dropped from Mars. I also saw an older legislative drafter become befuddled and angry when he was forced to start using the “track changes” and “comment” functions on Microsoft Word rather than marking up a bill with his beloved red pencil.

Sean J. Kealy. Technology & Legislative Drafting In The United States.
Internet: <sites.bu.edu> (adapted).

Judge the following item concerning the previous text.

The verb tense used in the survey question presented in the first sentence of the text indicates that there was no specific point in time respondents had to consider in their answers.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3962879

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026
Raciocínio Lógico - Lógica de Primeira Ordem

97) No que se refere a lógica de primeira ordem e lógica de argumentação, julgue o seguinte item.

Considere o conjunto universo dos deputados e os predicados a seguir:

$p(x)$: x é favorável à matéria.

$q(x)$: x vota favorável.

Nesse caso, a frase “Existe deputado que não é favorável à matéria e sua votação não é favorável.” pode ser escrita, em representação simbólica, como $\exists x \neg (p(x) \rightarrow q(x))$

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74953

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012
Raciocínio Lógico - Equivalências Lógicas (Inclui Negação de Proposições Compostas)

94) Em uma comissão parlamentar de inquérito, um lobista, ao esclarecer que não teria recebido dinheiro de certo empresário para pressionar pela aprovação de projeto de lei de interesse da empresa deste, assim argumentou: “Não conheço esse empresário nem ouvi falar de sua empresa. Se não conheço o empresário nem ouvi falar de sua empresa, não forneci meus dados bancários a ele. Se não forneci meus dados bancários a ele, ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta. Se ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta, eu não recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela aprovação desse projeto de lei. Logo, eu não ouvi falar dessa empresa nem recebi dinheiro para pressionar pela votação desse projeto de lei”.

A partir da situação hipotética descrita acima, julgue o item a seguir.

A proposição “Se não forneci meus dados bancários a ele, ele não depositou dinheiro em minha conta” é logicamente equivalente a “Se esse empresário depositou dinheiro em minha conta, então eu forneci meus dados bancários a ele”.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/74898

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Engenheiro/Engenharia Mecânica/2012
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

36) For many years, researchers have drawn attention to the importance of alignment between business and Information Technology (IT). In early studies, this often meant linking the business plan and the IT plan. Another perspective involved ensuring congruence between the business strategy and the IT strategy. Still another has required examining the fit between business needs and information system priorities. These conceptualizations have been enlarged over time and now research recognizes many points of alignment between business and IT.

Early motivation for alignment emerged from a focus on strategic business planning and long-range IT planning in the early 1980s. From a business perspective, planning was characterized as a top-down and a bottom-up process and departmental (e.g., IT) plans were created in support of corporate strategies. From an IT perspective, decisions on hardware and software had such long-term implications that tying them to current and future plans of the organizational unit was a practical necessity.

The business and IT performance implications of alignment have been demonstrated empirically and through case studies during the last decade. Simply put, the findings support the hypothesis that those organizations that successfully align their business strategy with their IT strategy will outperform those that do not. Alignment leads to more focused and strategic use of IT which, in turn, leads to increased performance.

Internet: <www.palgrave-journals.com> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

Researchers and business practitioners alike should tie decisions on hardware and software to corporate strategies.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/3960602

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026
Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

3) The role of the police in a healthy democracy is radically different from their role in authoritarian societies. In autocratic regimes, the police serve mainly to protect not the people, but the regime. The police are therefore typically politicized, with appointments being part of the patronage system that rewards regime loyalists. Police officers spend a great deal of time spying on the populace to unmask political opposition; crime against citizens is less of a concern. Abuse and corruption are usually rife, because police are not held accountable for their actions. Rather, political leaders tolerate abuses by the police in return for police loyalty to the regime.

By contrast, in democratic societies the primary mission of the police is to protect citizens against crime and disorder, including illegal or corrupt behavior by officials. In democracies, police have carefully circumscribed roles that require close and positive relations with ordinary citizens. The use of arms and pursuit of criminals are rare and take up only a tiny fraction of police time. Instead, police officers spend the vast bulk of their time building relationships with the community through patrols, community-enhancing activities, and listening to citizens. The goal of democratic policing is to build a web of relationships between the community and the police that helps to control crime by making police aware of the persons and activities in the communities that they are assigned to protect and by inclining citizens to trust and cooperate with police. This also achieves the primary goal of making citizens feel secure in their daily activities, thereby fostering a climate that encourages increased legitimate business activity, investment, and planning for the future.

Michael D. Wiatrowski and Jack A. Goldstone. The ballot and the badge: democratic policing. In: Journal of Democracy, Volume 21, Number 2. Internet: <muse.jhu.edu> (adapted).

Concerning the previous text, judge the following item.

It is correct to infer from the first paragraph of the text that investigating common crimes committed against citizens is not part of the police's duties in autocratic nations.

Certo
Errado

www.teccursos.com.br/questoes/74899

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Engenheiro/Engenharia Mecânica/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Significado de Palavras e Expressões (Sinônimos, Antônimos, Parônimos, Denotação, Conotação, etc.)

73) For many years, researchers have drawn attention to the importance of alignment between business and Information Technology (IT). In early studies, this often meant linking the business plan and the IT plan. Another perspective involved ensuring congruence between the business strategy and the IT strategy. Still another has required examining the fit between business needs and information system priorities. These conceptualizations have been enlarged over time and now research recognizes many points of alignment between business and IT.

Early motivation for alignment emerged from a focus on strategic business planning and long-range IT planning in the early 1980s. From a business perspective, planning was characterized as a top-down and a bottom-up process and departmental (e.g., IT) plans were created in support of corporate strategies. From an IT perspective, decisions on hardware and software had such long-term implications that tying them to current and future plans of the organizational unit was a practical necessity.

The business and IT performance implications of alignment have been demonstrated empirically and through case studies during the last decade. Simply put, the findings support the hypothesis that those organizations that successfully align their business strategy with their IT strategy will outperform those that do not. Alignment leads to more focused and strategic use of IT which, in turn, leads to increased performance.

Internet: <www.palgrave-journals.com> (adapted).

According to the text above, judge the following item.

In the text, "outperform" is synonymous with surpass.

Certo
Errado

www.teccursos.com.br/questoes/3857086

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Raciocínio Lógico - Tabela Verdade das Proposições Compostas

87) P: "Maria pagou e não assistiu."

Q: "João assistiu sem pagar."

No que concerne às proposições P e Q apresentadas anteriormente, julgue o item seguinte.

A tabela-verdade associada à proposição Q tem 8 linhas.

Certo
Errado

www.teccursos.com.br/questoes/1765186

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Museólogo/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

59) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <http://moneyland.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

A student in Los Angeles may be fined $ 250 for each day he skips classes.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

19) A compelling case can be made for mandatory audit rotation that auditors who keep the same client for too long get excessively cosy with its management. As somebody has put it, "When the same incumbent firm has been in place for 100 years, to me that's not an audit, that's a joint venture."

Most academic studies have either found no link between the length of a relationship and its quality, or determined that longer tenures yield better results, because the accountants have time to master the intricacies of clients' businesses. Obliging companies to solicit bids at regular intervals, as Britain does, has shaken up the business: HSBC said in August that it will drop KPMG in favour of PwC; on December 2nd Unilever announced that it is making the opposite switch. Indeed, the big accounting firms argue that forced rotation would reduce competition by preventing the incumbent from bidding.

Proponents counter that the accounting giants, and academics whose research is often financed by them, have good reason to resist change. Among the reform's strongest supporters are smaller firms that hope to break the Big Four's stranglehold.

Yet even the most vocal advocates of mandatory rotation concede that it is no magic bullet. Auditors have a conflict of interest at the heart of their business — they are paid by the companies they are supposed to assess objectively. Unless that changes, there will be no substitute for investors doing their own due diligence.

Idem (adapted).

Judge the following item, according to the text above.

The author accuses some firms of bribing unscrupulous academics to put forward compelling arguments hereby they could block proposals to create mandatory audit rotation.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

29) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The writer believes that family life is somewhat similar to parking in New York.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Significado de Palavras e Expressões (Sinônimos, Antônimos, Parônimos, Denotação, Conotação, etc.)

74) Technology Legislation

Technology-related legislation can have a huge impact on growing businesses, and some interesting issues are likely to pop up with the new Congress of the United States this year. Of great interest to growing businesses are the topics of data protection and net neutrality.

Laws that lay out more stringent requirements for retaining and protecting employee and customer data could be on the horizon. "The laws that apply to big business are going to trickle down to small business," says Ann Westerheim, founder and president of technology consulting firm Ekaru. "Businesses need to have that on their radar. You don't want to get hit with a fine because you're not complying." She suggests looking at laws like Sarbanes-Oxley to get an idea of where new tech laws could be heading.

The good news is that proper data protection is something businesses should be doing anyway. "A lot of the measures required to protect employee and customer data are just good business practices," says Westerheim. Growing businesses can head off potential compliance costs by gradually shoring up their IT security and data protection now.

Net neutrality is likely to be a hot issue again after stalling in the Senate last year. Net neutrality proponents want regulations to prevent network providers from prioritizing certain Internet traffic. "Net neutrality is a big issue for small businesses," says Westerheim. A net neutrality law stands a better chance of passing with strong Democratic backing this year, but it figures to be a hard-fought battle. Digital copyright issues could also come to the fore in Congress. With the changes brought about by the last election, it will be an interesting year for entrepreneurs to keep an eye on the goings-on in Washington.

Internet: <www.microsoft.com>.

Judge the following item according to the text above.

The word "entrepreneurs" can be defined as people who organizes, operates, and assumes the risk for a business venture.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Consultor Legislativo/Área VIII/2014

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

16) A compelling case can be made for mandatory audit rotation that auditors who keep the same client for too long get excessively cosy with its management. As somebody has put it, "When the same incumbent firm has been in place for 100 years, to me that's not an audit, that's a joint venture."

Most academic studies have either found no link between the length of a relationship and its quality, or determined that longer tenures yield better results, because the accountants have time to master the intricacies of clients' businesses. Obliging companies to solicit bids at regular intervals, as Britain does, has shaken up the business: HSBC said in August that it will drop KPMG in favour of PwC; on December 2nd Unilever announced that it is making the opposite switch. Indeed, the big accounting firms argue that forced rotation would reduce competition by preventing the incumbent from bidding.

Proponents counter that the accounting giants, and academics whose research is often financed by them, have good reason to resist change. Among the reform's strongest supporters are smaller firms that hope to break the Big Four's stranglehold.

Yet even the most vocal advocates of mandatory rotation concede that it is no magic bullet. Auditors have a conflict of interest at the heart of their business — they are paid by the companies they are supposed to assess objectively. Unless that changes, there will be no substitute for investors doing their own due diligence.

Idem (adapted).

Judge the following item, according to the text above.

The fragment "longer tenures yield better results" indicates that it is necessary a considerable amount of time for an auditing company which has been hired to sharpen its auditing skills and deliver superior results.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

5) The security risks faced by Parliaments, legislatures, elected representatives, and the officials who support them, differ greatly according to their evolving national and local circumstances, among other things. For some, the biggest security risks may stem from disruptive protesters and cyber criminals, but terrorism may pose the most concerning risks for others. In fact, threat actors differ enormously in their intentions and capabilities, which also change over time.

Given that risk is a product of threat, vulnerability, and impact, it follows that ultimately there are only three ways to reduce security risk — namely, by reducing the threat, reducing the vulnerability, or reducing the impact (or some combination thereof). Reducing the threat element of security risk is difficult, especially in the case of determined and capable threat actors. Responsibility for reducing threats tends to lie mainly with national law enforcement, security, and intelligence agencies. That said, parliaments and other organisations can contribute to threat reduction through deterrence — in other words, by influencing the intentions of threat actors. Carefully crafted security-minded communications can convey a discouraging message to potential attackers, to the effect that they should expect to confront professional security measures and face a substantial risk of being caught. For instance, a parliamentary website might advertise that visitors will undergo 'airport-style screening', without explaining precisely what that entails. The public should be reassured by such message, whereas some threat actors might be deterred.

Paul Martin. Parliamentary security: an introductory guide. Internet: <www.cpahq.org> (adapted).

Considering the preceding text, judge the following item.

As mentioned at the end of the text, the message about the airport-style screening advertised in a parliamentary website could have a dual effect on people, even if they are not told its exact implications.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Contratação e Logística/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Substituição de Palavras e Reescrita de Frases (Inglês)

81) Technology Legislation

Technology-related legislation can have a huge impact on growing businesses, and some interesting issues are likely to pop up with the new Congress of the United States this year. Of great interest to growing businesses are the topics of data protection and net neutrality.

Laws that lay out more stringent requirements for retaining and protecting employee and customer data could be on the horizon. "The laws that apply to big business are going to trickle down to small business," says Ann Westerheim, founder and president of technology consulting firm Ekaru. "Businesses need to have that on their radar. You don't want to get hit with a fine because you're not complying." She suggests looking at laws like Sarbanes-Oxley to get an idea of where new tech laws could be heading.

The good news is that proper data protection is something businesses should be doing anyway. "A lot of the measures required to protect employee and customer data are just good business practices," says Westerheim. Growing businesses can head off potential compliance costs by gradually shoring up their IT security and data protection now.

Net neutrality is likely to be a hot issue again after stalling in the Senate last year. Net neutrality proponents want regulations to prevent network providers from prioritizing certain Internet traffic. "Net neutrality is a big issue for small businesses," says Westerheim. A net neutrality law stands a better chance of passing with strong Democratic backing this year, but it figures to be a hard-fought battle. Digital copyright issues could also come to the fore in Congress. With the changes brought about by the last election, it will be an interesting year for entrepreneurs to keep an eye on the goings-on in Washington.

Internet: <www.microsoft.com>.

Judge the following item according to the text above.

The phrasal verb "lay out" could be correctly replaced in the text by avoid.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - TL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Policial Legislativo Federal/2026

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

8) The security risks faced by Parliaments, legislatures, elected representatives, and the officials who support them, differ greatly according to their evolving national and local circumstances, among other things. For some, the biggest security risks may stem from disruptive protesters and cyber criminals, but terrorism may pose the most concerning risks for others. In fact, threat actors differ enormously in their intentions and capabilities, which also change over time.

Given that risk is a product of threat, vulnerability, and impact, it follows that ultimately there are only three ways to reduce security risk — namely, by reducing the threat, reducing the vulnerability, or reducing the impact (or some combination thereof). Reducing the threat element of security risk is difficult, especially in the case of determined and capable threat actors. Responsibility for reducing threats tends to lie mainly with national law enforcement, security, and intelligence agencies. That said, parliaments and other organisations can contribute to threat reduction through deterrence — in other words, by influencing the intentions of threat actors. Carefully crafted security-minded communications can convey a discouraging message to potential attackers, to the effect that they should expect to confront professional security measures and face a substantial risk of being caught. For instance, a parliamentary website might advertise that visitors will undergo ‘airport-style screening’, without explaining precisely what that entails. The public should be reassured by such message, whereas some threat actors might be deterred.

Paul Martin. Parliamentary security: an introductory guide. Internet: <www.cpahq.org> (adapted).

Considering the preceding text, judge the following item.

According to the text, with “Carefully crafted security-minded communications”, potential attackers are discouraged and caught before being able to cause any harm.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

52) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Internet: <http://moneyland.time.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

Kelt Cooper's proposal resulted in a debate about fining truancy in a city of the state of Connecticut.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2026

Raciocínio Lógico - Equivalências Lógicas (Inclui Negação de Proposições Compostas)

91) P: “Maria pagou e não assistiu.”

Q: “João assistiu sem pagar.”

No que concerne às proposições P e Q apresentadas anteriormente, julgue o item seguinte.

A proposição P é a negação de “Se Maria pagou, então assistiu.”.

Certo
Errado

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

34) In order for young people to do better in school, it helps if they actually are in school. Schools basically have two options when it comes to fighting chronic truancy. There's the positive approach, in which students are rewarded with iPads, sneakers, gift cards, and other incentives merely for showing up at school. Then there's the flip side, in which students and parents are penalized for unexcused absences. In the past, parents have been sentenced to jail time for failing to get their children to school. Prosecutors have also suggested jail time as a penalty for missing parent-teacher conferences. Now there's a school system in the news because its superintendent plans on fining families $ 75 for each day a student skips school.

In New Britain, Connecticut, a new superintendent of schools named Kelt Cooper wants to end high truancy rates among public school students, and he's proposing monetary penalties to get the job done. A plan to fine students $ 75 per skipped school day is now being considered by New Britain council members.

The concept of fining kids for skipping school may come as a shock, but it's not new. In Ohio, the guardians responsible for a student guilty of habitual truancy can be fined up to $ 500 and/or be required to perform up to 70 hours of community service. Until recently, students in Los Angeles could be hit with a $ 250 penalty for each count of truancy; in early 2012 the law was amended and the expensive fines were removed, though a $ 20 penalty may still be handed out for the third offense.

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The novelty of fining students who play truant is shocking to most people in the USA.

Certo
Errado

www.tecconcursos.com.br/questoes/1764332

CEBRASPE (CESPE) - AL (CAM DEP)/CAM DEP/Processo Legislativo e Gestão/2012

Língua Inglesa (Inglês) - Interpretação de Textos (Understanding)

57) Parking in New York sends you to ecstasy or rips your heart out. Which is to say, it's a natural continuation of family life. Most of the time it is joyous. Joy is an odd word to use in connection with parking, but some of my happiest moments have come in connection with finding a good parking space. Often enough, though, it is terrible — so it feels like an even balance, and for this reason, parking the car is always an occasion of great suspense.

Take one recent evening, a Wednesday: we arrived in our neighborhood at the end of an ambitious expedition, our bedtime schedule long lost. There had been a truly fantastic sunset that we witnessed coming down the Henry Hudson Parkway, but our pleasure was diminished by the fact that the baby was asleep in the car. It was after 8 P. M. He would need to be woken and bathed. The only question was if Evangeline — five years old — might still get to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour.

The answer lay with the fate of the parking.

We approached our block, our building. A tremor of hope that a miracle would occur moved through my wife and me, battling despair as the alternative scenario. I asked her the usual question, like the riddle of the Sphinx: "Do you want to get out with the kids or do you want to drive around with me looking for a spot?"

She doesn't find this choice easy. I don't blame her. In this sense I have it easy — I will park the car. It is a necessity. She is an excellent driver but this parking duty feels fatherly, hunter-gatherer, stoic.

Internet: <www.newyorker.com> (adapted).

Based on the text above, judge the following item.

The couple's feelings as they get near home are expressed as a struggle between hope and discouragement.

Certo
Errado

1) Certo	2) Certo	3) Errado	4) Certo	5) Certo	6) Certo	7) Anulada
8) Errado	9) Certo	10) Errado	11) Certo	12) Certo	13) Errado	14) Errado
15) Errado	16) Certo	17) Errado	18) Errado	19) Errado	20) Errado	21) Errado
22) Errado	23) Errado	24) Anulada	25) Errado	26) Certo	27) Certo	28) Errado
29) Certo	30) Errado	31) Certo	32) Errado	33) Errado	34) Errado	35) Errado
36) Errado	37) Errado	38) Errado	39) Errado	40) Errado	41) Certo	42) Certo
43) Certo	44) Certo	45) Certo	46) Errado	47) Errado	48) Certo	49) Certo
50) Certo	51) Errado	52) Certo	53) Errado	54) Certo	55) Errado	56) Certo
57) Certo	58) Errado	59) Errado	60) Errado	61) Certo	62) Errado	63) Errado
64) Errado	65) Errado	66) Certo	67) Errado	68) Certo	69) Certo	70) Errado
71) Certo	72) Certo	73) Certo	74) Certo	75) Certo	76) Certo	77) Certo
78) Errado	79) Certo	80) Certo	81) Errado	82) Errado	83) Certo	84) Errado
85) Certo	86) Anulada	87) Errado	88) Certo	89) Certo	90) Certo	91) Certo
92) Certo	93) Errado	94) Certo	95) Errado	96) Errado	97) Errado	